RECEPTION AT NOON.

At 12 o'clock the Queen again appeared, attired in a black point d'esprit over white satin, with diamond ornaments, wearing upon her corsage the Star of the Order of Kalakaua. A procession composed of Hawaiian youths carrying tabu sticks draped in white tapa, and two boys carrying the royal torch, composed of a basket of ti leaves in which were placed kukui nuts, marched around the veranda, and were stationed on the outer steps. John D. Aimoku and Joseph Aea, wearing long ahueas reaching to their waists, were assigned as chair attendants, while Liliuokalani and Myra Heleluhe stood in waiting behind the Queen. The crowds arrived early. The first to be received was the latter day Saints Relief Society, composed of Hawaiian women, who presented a beautiful lilwa wreath to the Queen through their spokesman, Mrs. Kaulukou. Following them came members of the Aloha Aina Society and the general public. There was much curiosity on the part of the foreigners to watch proceedings after they had been received, and many hung around the windows and doors with eyes a-goggle. Two ladies, evidently strangers, wandered into a room which was filled with rare kahilis, and when they thought themselves unobserved, attempted to pluck oo and tiwi feathers from them. The action was seen, however, and they received a rebuff from a gentleman who was standing in the next room, causing them to leave the grounds in haste. It is estimated that nearly 1,200 persons were present at the reception. Several of the trades organizations of the Labor Day parade availed themselves of the opportunity to pay their respects to Liliuokalani in a body, as did the native company of the National Guard.

OFFICIALS FEAST WITH QUEEN.

At 3 o'clock Washington Place was again thronged with guests, who had been bidden to the afternoon luau. This was intended mostly for foreigners, Federal and Territorial officials, officers of the army and navy, the clergy and Hawaiians. The Queen was escorted to the tent by Judge M. M. Estee, of the United States Circuit Court. Mrs. Estee accompanied Prince David. The Queen sat between Judge Estee and Bishop Willis, of the Anglican Church. The luau passed off pleasantly, music of many kinds being rendered. Informality of dress was noticeable, and the afternoon festivity partook more of the nature of a lawn party.

It is said that never has such a wealth of feather leis been seen in many years as yesterday. Old cabinets seemed to have been rifled of their contents that the owners of these valuable leis might exhibit them. There were some made of down that are rarely, if ever, seen in public, and are valued at many hundreds of dollars. The Queen's own cabinet of leis of all descriptions was much admired.

There were many affecting scenes during the day, when some of the very oldest Hawaiians greeted Liliuokalani. All the old memories of days that had been full of inspiration to them seemed to be revived, and their eyes welled up with tears as they bowed down upon their knees. Last evening was given over to music, dancing, and general merry making. A custom of the old days was to announce a chieftess or person of high rank to the sovereign by employing a singer to chant their genealogy, which was continued until the greetings between sovereign and subject were concluded. An instance of this kind yesterday, only one of the day—occurred when Mrs. Emma De Fries made her entrance into the reception room at noon. The old chanter of the Kalakaua reign was employed for the occasion, and when the room was almost cleared of people, Mrs. De Fries entered, preceded by the chanter, who rattled off a genealogy which would have pleased the most critical. The unchallenged high chieftesses who had been as quiet as church mice when they made their obeisances, stood by their countenances wreathed in smiles at the newest claimant to royal lineage.

One woman who entered is a direct descendant of the Kamehamehas—Kea-nu, a tall, stately woman—who made little or no ado over her claims to royal blood. She is now old and mentally infirm, and had to be led to the reception parlor. Once inside, she "came to," however, and her dignified bearing and easy manner caused much favorable comment. She greeted the Queen as one high chieftess to another, and was cordially greeted in return. The chieftess carried out to the full extent the lessons of court etiquette which she had received earlier in life.

Among those who ably assisted Liliuokalani during the day were Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Carter, and Mr. Edward Liliuokalani. Following is a list of those invited to the afternoon luau:

Mr. and Mrs. Ahrens, Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Allen, Mr. Frank Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Ashford, Dr. and Mrs. Augur, Mr. W. H. Babbitt, J. C.
